

Issue #0: Master Freeze

A hero, a villain, a legend. The savior of the universe and the destroyer of the universe. Channels chaos and deflects it. Master Freeze.

I originally created Master Freeze as the center of my own universe. He represented strength, intelligence, leadership, bravery, and complete dominance. There were times when I wrote Master Freeze to be a selfless hero who made sacrifices for the greater good. There were times when I wrote Master Freeze to be an agent of chaos against injustice and corruption.

There were also times when Master Freeze was the source of trouble. He launched a program to control the planet. He assembled a team to wipe the universe clean and start over. He even went to war with himself until nothing was left.

As a kid, Master Freeze was simply the cooler version of me that I designed for my comics. I figured it was only a matter of time before it made sense that I inserted myself into my own media. At first, he was just another character with the powers I always wanted and a matching personality to go with it.

However, I knew that Master Freeze needed to be something far more, not just because it was a representation of me. The character itself was a projection of my essence. I unintentionally created the perfect figurehead for my own enjoyment. Master Freeze was the full package: intelligence, personality, aura, powers, strength, style.

This is how I decided to make Master Freeze the most powerful being in his universe. He experienced many phases in his life that lead to the moment where he could decide the balance of the cosmos themselves. I will now explain his backstory.

In the beginning, Master Freeze was just a child with big responsibilities. At that time, he was simply referred to as Subject Zero.

During an important superhuman project, the overseer and his wife volunteered to be the first experiments receiving treatment. The trial was a success, resulting in the creation of the superheroes Mr. A and the Final Boss. The two decided to shut down the superhuman project after realizing the threat it possesses, but little did they know that their children would be born with their own powers.

Subject Zero was the second child of Mr. A and the Final Boss, but the first to be born after the superhuman project was completed. He was born with a reduced level of superhuman strength and reflexes similar to his father. He did not seem to have the ability to control the weather, as was the case with his mother.

Zero was subjected to countless trials and confinements in his early childhood. When he turned ten years old, he was transferred to a special academy for superheroes. Zero quickly demonstrated that he was superior to all of the other candidates and the academy directors discovered that he had an advanced intellect.

By the age of 15, Zero became the youngest person to join a superhero team called Awesome United. He became the leader of the team at 16 and left of his own accord by 17, where he then joined a special operations unit. Zero became Agent Zero and worked closely with a renowned spy, Agent Dexter until he turned 18. Afterwards, Zero disobeyed command from the special operations unit and became a fugitive when he refused to comply with a mission that had the potential to start a war.

Zero's entire existence was wiped clean when the special operations unit, academy, and his father's organization could not track him down in one year. At this time, Zero had already found a new home and identity.

During an escape flight towards Russia, Zero's plane was shot down and he crash landed on a mysterious shore along the coast of Eastern Japan.

Not recognizing the location, Zero explored beyond the shore and into the forest where he ran into a mysterious warrior dressed in a metallic cloak. Zero learned that he had crash landed into a hidden land in Japan that was only accessible to specific people, and that somehow he discovered it by accident.

The mysterious warrior that Zero met was called Master Wrench, a wise and powerful shinobi that had a reputation for defeating thousands of enemies on his own. Master Wrench took care of Zero and trained him, believing in a destined future where Zero would be very important in saving the universe.

A few months later, Zero discovered that he and his mother were descendants of a tribe native to the hidden land, which explained why he could enter the land at all. As Zero trained more, he also discovered he had innate powers similar to his mother. Where his mother could control the weather, he had absolute control over ice.

Master Wrench advised Zero to return to his homeland to train with his mother and refine his powers. Zero, not having seen his mother for years, returned to his father where he was able to clear his own name. However, he took the opportunity to change his identity again, adopting the name Deep Freeze and working as a superhero to help his father battle against corruption.

Deep Freeze returned to Japan at 21 to resume training with Master Wrench. In just one month, he achieved mastery, becoming Master Freeze! From there, he saved the universe, assembled the Legion, fought in the Ice War, and restarted reality itself.

To be honest, his story was never this coherent. I have changed a lot of details and written non-canon type of stories with Master Freeze. What I have just described to you is what I am happy with right now.

There is still more to know about Master Freeze as you navigate more of my projects in the future.

Master Freeze is no longer me. I admire the character a lot, and I am proud of the development, but I don't think it is healthy to keep imagining myself as the character. Instead, there are now "two" entities called "Master Freeze."

The first is myself, a creator and gamer that uses the alias "Master Freeze" which was inspired by the character, which is the second entity.

Another note about the character is that when he shows up in a story that isn't primarily about him, it usually means whatever is going on will wrap up quickly. He is like the ace that can end any conflict in an instant or cause huge problems.

I like to write Master Freeze with a lot of aura because I think he is so cool, pun intended. I believe every writer has the right to make at least one character like this!

That is all I am going to say about Master Freeze for now. Please keep an eye out for future projects featuring the character. I have a lot in mind!

Thank you for tuning into Issue #0 of the Icebox, which is only befitting for Master Freeze himself. Stay as cool as you can, but you won't reach his level!
