

Issue #1: The Return

Welcome to the Icebox. This is my personal blog, where I will spotlight anything in the world that interests me. I will mainly focus on video games and the occasional discussion of fictional universes, but I may also write about traveling, beatboxing, scientific advancements, space exploration, and VENOM!

The Icebox started as my personal touch to the newspaper, "The Beacon", which is a student-run, semester-long newspaper at Wilkes University. When I started working for the Beacon, I wanted to make sure I really made an impression. My solution was to establish a platform to spotlight video games, many of which are not popular but still worth discussing. For three years, I wrote for the school newspaper, producing exactly 50 issues in total about video games, beatboxing, and sometimes anime.

In the final issue of the Icebox hosted at Wilkes University, I actually mentioned my potential revival of the blog and developing my own personal creative platform. I have accomplished just that through The Wrench Studios™, where I can freely share my own creative work and am not restricted by deadlines or word counts.

If any members of the Beacon are reading this right now, current or retired, then I want to say thank you for giving me a platform and supporting my creativity. I also hope that you find something you can enjoy on my website.

As for new readers...welcome. I am Master Freeze. I have a Bachelor's of Science with a major in Neuroscience, minors in Psychology and Biology, and a Pre-Medical concentration. I strive to be a neurologist with sights set on international healthcare.

There will be more information about The Wrench Studios™ in the next issue of the Icebox. For now, please visit my page from the Beacon newspaper.
