

Nonsense Origin

Nonsense Comix is the earliest collection of comics featuring silly characters and crazy ideas. The comics were written during recess, free time, or lunch at elementary school. Many of the comics simply defied all logic or contained references to both real and fictional people, places, and events.

Nonsense Origin is the only remaining evidence of the existence of Nonsense Comix before The Wrench Studios. It is an archive of the last pieces of work left, surviving over 12 years of storage and physical protection. The comics have finally been scanned to immortalize them via digital storage.

Author's Note:

Nonsense Comix was mostly a reflection of my boredom and creativity. The truth is, I did not find elementary school very challenging at all. I would frequently occupy myself by drawing comics in my free time and even during class. I don't remember getting in trouble for it. I think the teachers just understood that I was still able to complete my work. Most of the time, I did what was asked of me in advance, which gave me the luxury to do what I wanted in class. The only time it was a problem was when other students would see me and think they could do the same. I really appreciate my elementary school teachers. I didn't realize it at the time, but I had wonderful people to learn from.

In the scans below are the earliest evidence of my hobby for drawing comics and silly things.

Page 1: This is probably my first comic ever. You can see that I cared to name every character, which were frequently based on my classmates (especially Brody and Nick, my busmates).

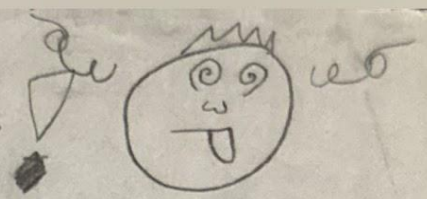

Page 2: A rhyme I created on the spot that describes frustration. On the bottom is a fun snippet of chaos. I frequently drew these types of scenes when I wasn't in the mood to write a story. They were always filled with references or characters my sister created.

Page 3: This is a blatant reference to Ultimate Spider-Man, with some doodles below. This was when I came up with "Ultramite".

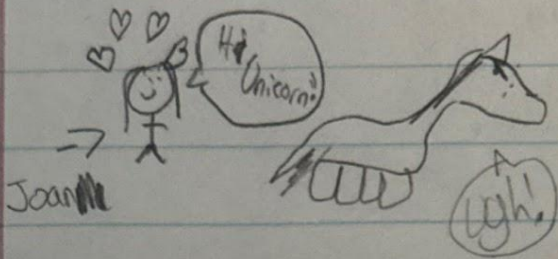

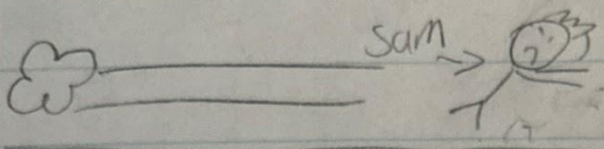

Page 4: A fourth grade activity that is on the back of Page 2. I never wasted any paper. My handwriting hasn't changed much since then. Actually, it may be even worse now!

Nonsense Comix

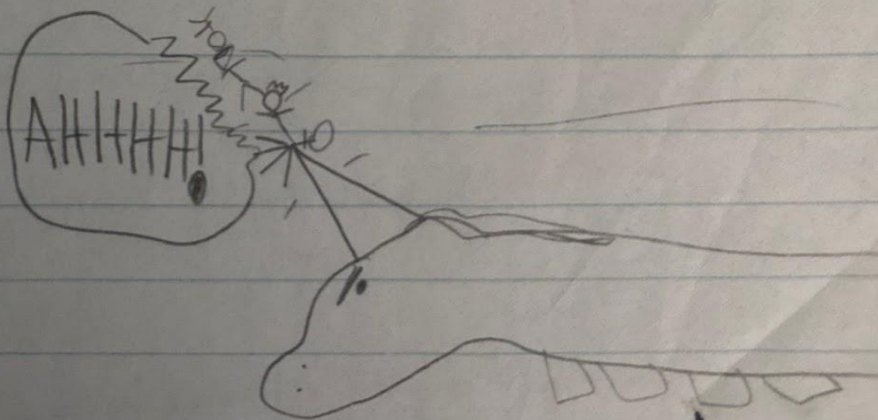

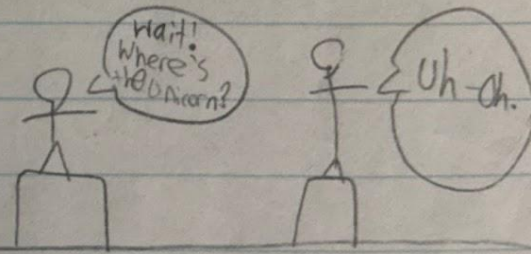

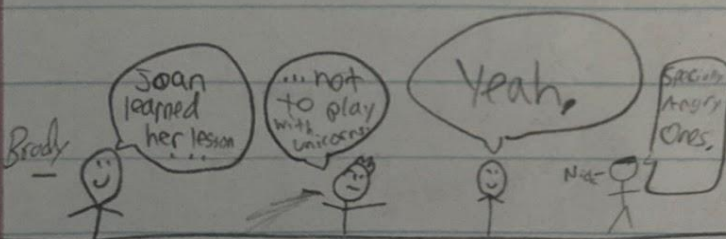

Oh no! A Unicorn is attacking!

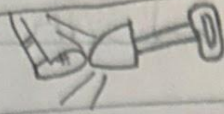

Are you insane? Don't do it or it'll...

... Run you over.

Kick a shovel,

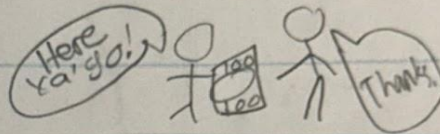

ponch the wall,

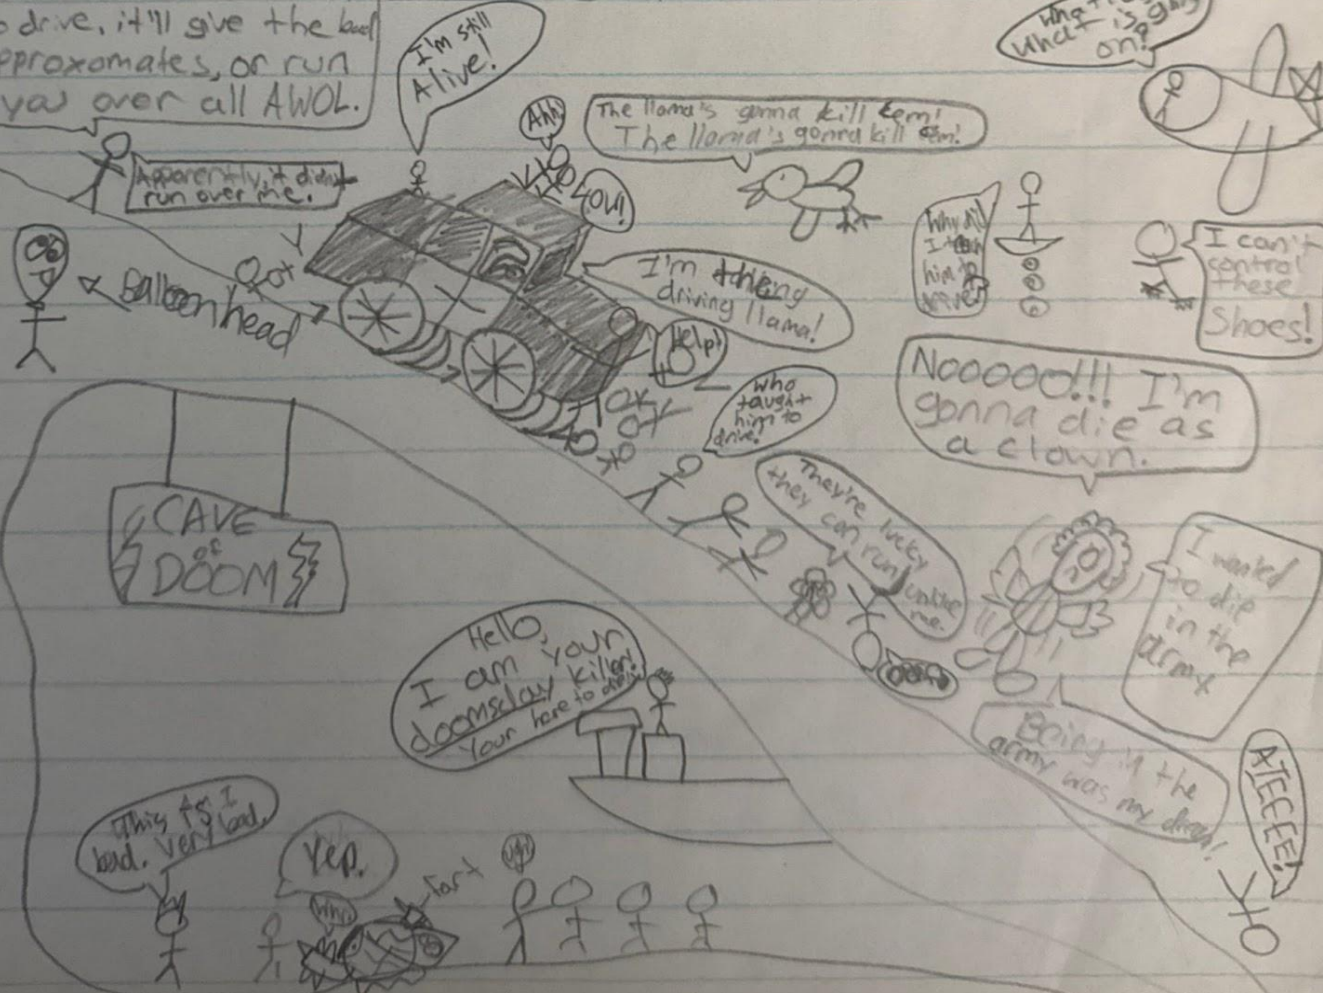

~~headbutt a robot who's gone AWOL!~~

Pay a 100 dollar TOL!

If you teach a llama to drive, it'll give the best approximates, or run you over all AWOL.

~~NONSENSE~~
~~COMIX~~

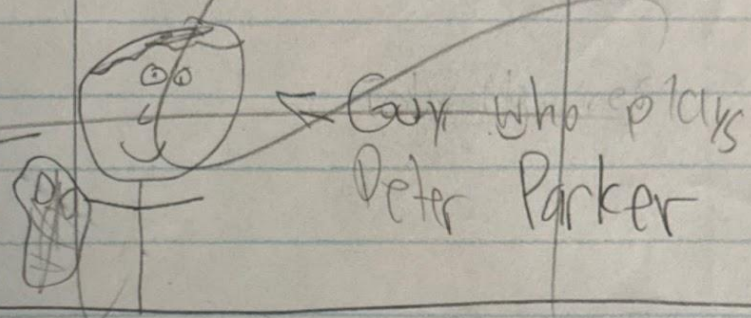

Ultimate Comix TM

One day... It's a Dinosaur!
A Mutant one! It smells!

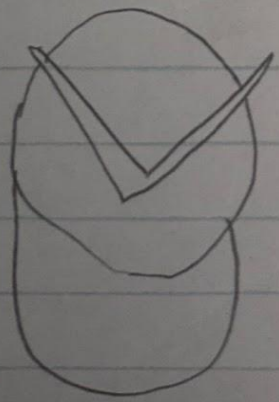

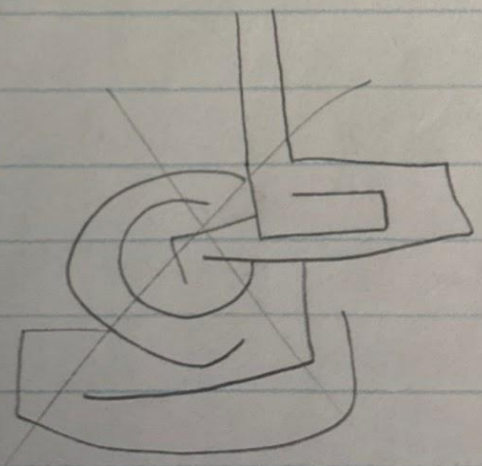

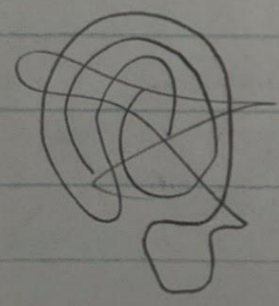

Uhh... what is that? Comic Seller On top of the monster is...

YOU! SPIDER-MAN!

No one believes it, but he betrays them!

The Amazing Spider-Man is over there.
