"The Highly Unexpected Guest", or THUG for short, is a story about a man in a mask who really loves money. He will do absolutely anything to get his hands on a big bag of cash. The authorities loathe him and the bank systems fear him. THUG lives in a secret garage where he stores weapons of mass destruction that he acquired from the black market or designed on his own. Eventually, he meets two more criminals, "The Hustling Intelligent Economic Fugitive" (THIEF) and "Cool Robber of Old Knickknacks" (CROOK), who agree to be a team and steal as much money as possible. However, a con is a con. While they may seem to be friends, they don't always get along, and it gets in the way of their mission. THUG, THIEF, and CROOK eventually form their own syndicate to establish trust. The syndicate is called BADDOS, which doesn't actually stand for anything.

Author's Note:

"The Highly Unexpected Guest" was a name that just appeared in my mind one random day. I remember it was during reading class in the fourth grade. I was so proud of the name that I wrote it down immediately and decided to design a character to match the name.

At first, I was thinking about designing a spy who dresses in a black suit, similar to James Bond. However, I already had a character, Agent Dexter, that matched the idea.

My next idea was to make the character someone who lived in a mansion with a royal family. The concept would be something like a murder mystery, where our protagonist was indeed the murderer. However, I was not ready for such complex writing as a fourth grader.

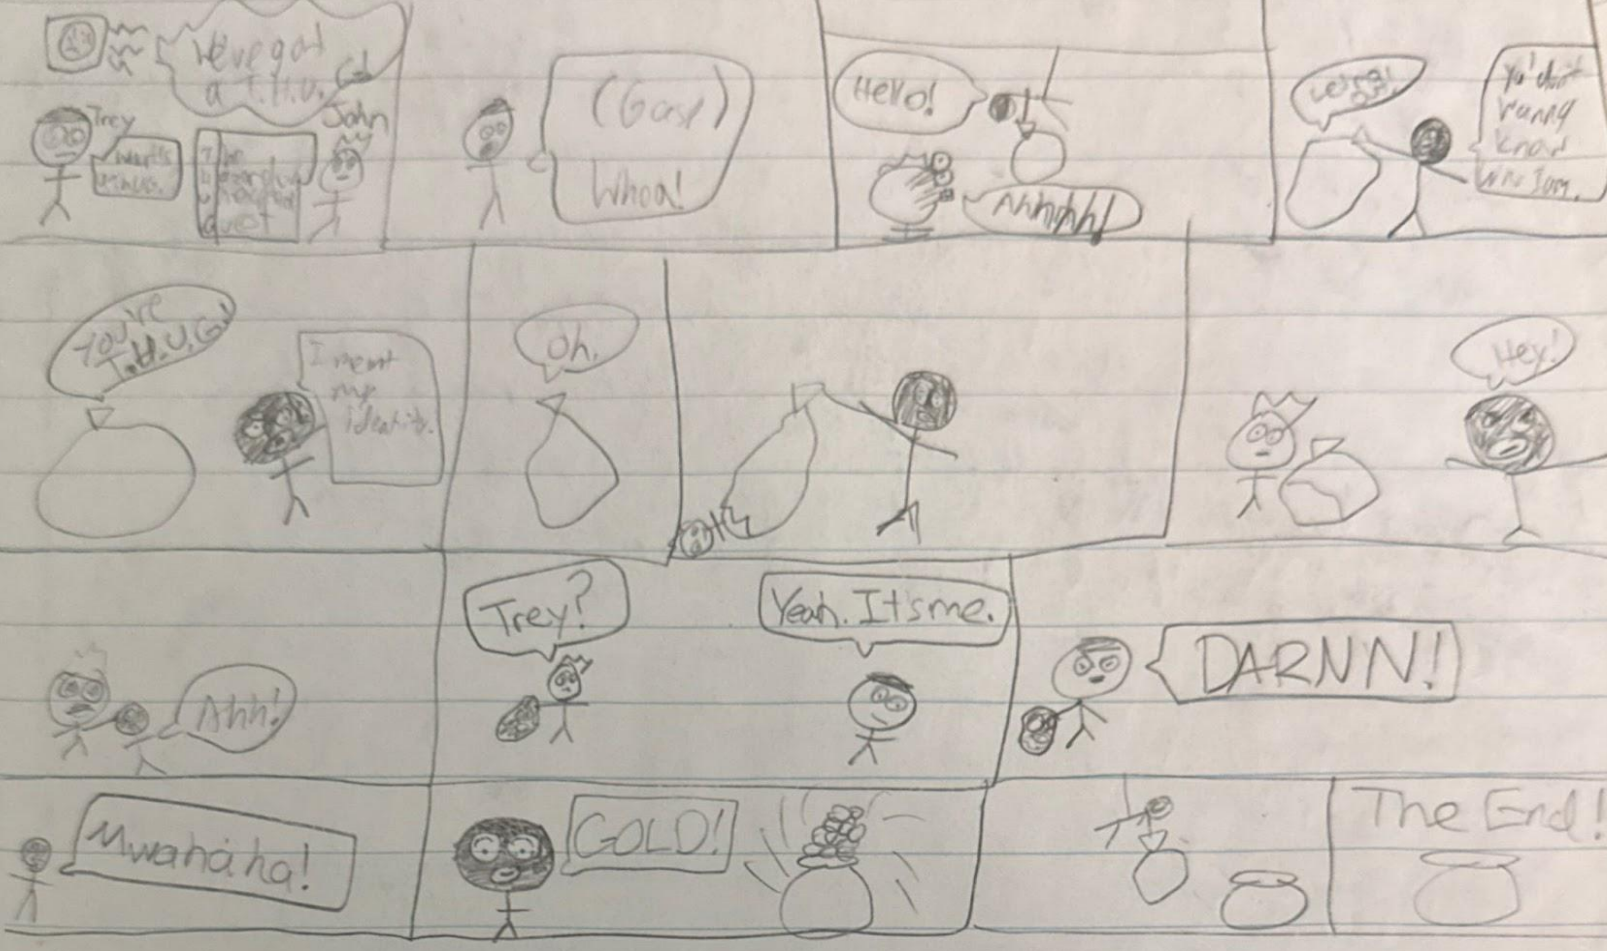

I finally settled on the one cliché that I did not yet cover, which was bank robbers. Thus, "The Highly Unexpected Guest" became "THUG" and things were a lot easier from there. I had a lot of fun layering more comical elements while slowly incorporating a plot.

The scans you see here can be considered like concept art or just doodling. The characters' design and names were all changed later on. In later versions, THUG himself even started to use his talents to help people instead of harming them.

There were even some stories where THUG and his friends encountered Stuper Machine or Master Freeze! Unfortunately, those are long gone now. I frequently disposed my work in the recycling, so they have taken a different physical form while their essence stays with me—in my head and my heart.
