Issue #3: The Awesome Comix

"The Awesome Comix" has quite a long history. My first instance of creating comics had to have been somewhere in the first grade, which was in 2011. However, the most development happened in 2014-2015, when I was in the fourth grade.

I started "Nonsense Comix" for silly ideas and drawings filled with comical elements. This "company" started because I had learned about trademark and copyright in class. My friends and I decided to name our own comics under their companies and used TM, ©, and ® to protect our ideas from being stolen by peers. It was a bit of an inside joke, as we would be ready to snatch any work that didn't have all three of these symbols drawn on it somewhere. I actually managed to steal an entire comic company by this method. My friend had carelessly made "Crazy Comix" that I absorbed into my own Nonsense Comix just to mess with him. This inspired a change I had made later in the development of my comic company, which I will explain in a second.

Nonsense Comix brought a number of crazy and iconic stories, such as "Stupid Machine", "THUG", and even my very first comic about a rampaging unicorn. However, it was "Awesomeness Comix" that really changed everything. This was my first instance of an overarching company. I created sections called the "Nonsense" and "Ultrimate" divisions. I also included Crazy Comix as a child company to Awesomeness Comix before completely dissolving it and sticking with my own work only. This all happened in the fifth grade, in 2016, which was ten years before I wrote this issue of the Icebox.

The "Nonsense Division" was the new Nonsense Comix while the "Ultrimate Division" was for more serious work featuring serialization, complex plots, and better artwork. The word "Ultrimate" is a combination of "ultra" and "ultimate", the latter being a word that I discovered thanks to Ben 10. It is also cool that the word can be pronounced with "might" at the ending. The Ultrimate Division is where I was able to develop stories about "Deep Freeze", "AWESOME", "Agent Dexter", and more.

In 2017, I added an "Animate Division" for animated projects. I also focused more on the Ultrimate Division, which I renamed to "Ultramite Division".

In 2018, I renamed my company to “Awesome Comix” and began to contribute creative writing and stop motion animations. “Awesome” really was my favorite word for a long time. In first grade my teacher used to sing a song “A-W-E-S-O-M-E” that I still think about to this day. I contributed a lot more to the development of a fictional universe for the Ultramite Division at this time, especially with a big focus on “Master Freeze”, who I redesigned in 2017 to be a ninja.

In 2019, I was no longer writing comics. I focused instead on developing the earliest version of The Wrench Studios™ through the “Wrench Clan”. I produced animations and wrote lore, as mentioned in the previous issue of the Icebox. When quarantine hit in 2020, I became even more obsessed with developing the studio. This is why the early Wrench produced Scratch games, YouTube videos, and even music.

At some point in quarantine, I decided to rename Awesome Comix to “Wrench Comix” and dissolved the divisions. Until 2025, the Wrench Comix lay almost completely dormant, with only the occasional artwork being contributed. Instead, the early Wrench Studios was used for my creative development as I navigated through university.

However, I am at a very refreshing point in my life. I traveled abroad many times, graduated from university, quit my long-term jobs and commitments, and have plans to relocate with my family after 21 years of living in the same place. I am at a point in my life where I understand more than ever just how important it is to embrace your roots.

Therefore, I have chosen to revive Awesome Comix with the old Nonsense and Ultramite Divisions. I will be bringing back some of my favorite characters and stories. I will continue to develop new work. I will also pay tribute to the era of the Wrench.

You can click the “Awesome Comix” tab on the website for updates. I will also be uploading “Classix”, which are direct scans of my work that I have stored for more than a decade. You will also be able to read background information about different comics. I will write my own summaries and personal notes with the scans—please check it out!

Thank you for reading this issue of the Icebox! Stay cool out there.
